Re: Federal-State Joint Board on Universal Service, CC Docket No. 96-45

Dear Ms. Dortch:

Cornell University submits this letter to offer our concerns that a number-based contribution mechanism would have a considerable deleterious impact on universities.

We have calculated that our per-year federal universal service obligation would increase from $18,000 a year to over $320,000 a year if a number-based approach were adopted, assuming that the per-number fee was $1.00.

Cornell does not have budgetary flexibility to offset this potential increase without passing on these increased fees to our students. In addition, if implemented, the FCC's action may require cuts with respect to Cornell's institutional research, teaching and safety priorities including, but not limited to:

- The elimination of individual telephone and 911 services for students in campus housing.
- The transition of budgeted funding from education and research-based programs to the telecommunications budget.
- Delays in efforts to invest in research networks, i.e., NLR, Tera-Grid, ESnet, NYSERnet, and Internet2.

While Cornell supports the goals of universal service, Cornell believes a number-based contribution mechanism would place an undue burden on most if not all large Universities. Unlike for-profit corporations, Cornell has limited means to compensate for this potential 17-fold increase in fees without a direct and negative impact on our teaching and research mission.

To address these concerns Cornell asks:

- The FCC to proceed with caution in adopting a number-based plan that does not account for the specific concerns of the higher education community.
- The FCC support fair and reasoned assessments based on PBX trunks not individual numbers for enterprise institutions such as Cornell.
- Cornell suggests that no reform proposals be formally adopted by the Commission until such time as to the full impact of those proposals is studied and understood by all impacted parties.

Respectfully submitted,
